WHAT IS USBBY?
The United States Board on Books for Young People is the United States Section of the International Board on Books for Young People and is a place for those interested in national and international activities related to children’s literature. USBBY publishes a semi-annual newsletter for its members, maintains an active website, sponsors regional conferences which feature speakers of international interest, and co-sponsors sessions held at conferences of the American Library Association, the International Reading Association, and the National Council of Teachers of English. The USBBY provides a discounted rate to members for subscriptions to Bookbird, a quarterly international journal on literature for children. It encourages the provision of high quality literature for young people throughout the world, and it cooperates with organizations which have similar objectives.

From the USBBY President

This message comes to you in a newsletter with a new name—Bridges—and new look. I am excited about it, and I warmly welcome Nancy Hadaway as the new editor. I also express deep thanks to Janelle Mathis for her six years of excellent service as editor. USBBY is most fortunate to have so many dedicated members who volunteer their time and talents for our organization.

By the time you read this, USBBY also should have a new and improved look for its website (www.usbby.org). I hope you have already discovered it and enjoy its more streamlined look and user-friendly capabilities. For that, we thank Ann Speltz, the past General Secretary of USBBY, and her vision, initiative, and knowledge about website design. I also thank James Stiles and the USBBY Publicity Committee for their assistance and thoughtful recommendations on the final website revisions. Be sure to also find and “friend” us on Facebook.

Now, I offer some updates about progress toward the two goals I named in my last message: enhancing our efforts to internationalize USBBY and promoting membership in USBBY. Regarding the first goal, you also will find in this issue a new column, “Global Partnerships,” which will highlight developments with our Twinning Partners: Haiti, Lebanon, Palestine, South Africa, and Zambia. The first column, written by Ellis Vance, describes the new strategy we are taking to strengthen collaborations with these Partners. We have identified USBBY Board liaisons with each Twinning Partner, whose task is to explore ways to mutually benefit each other in promoting children’s literature projects. I am excited to report that we are developing specific ideas with Haiti, Palestine, and South Africa. While relatively small, every endeavor can increase awareness of each other’s work and enhance our international perspectives. If you want to learn more about our Twinning Partners, you can find additional information about their activities on our website.

Among all the literacy-related organizations in the United States, USBBY is unique in its mission to recognize international children’s literature, and we need to capitalize on the strength of that exceptional focus. I know this attracted you to our organization, and I also believe that many of you may have good connections with one or more of our Twinning Partners. We have already received some ideas from members that are being explored, and I encourage you to contact me through the USBBY website if you have a worthy children’s literature-related concept related to any of our Twinning Partners. For example, if you are a classroom teacher or librarian, you may be interested in connecting your students or young patrons with e-pals from a Partner country to share their reading with each other. Our Partners may have suggestions about whom to contact in their countries. Or you may want to feature an author or illustrator from one of our Partner countries in your work setting. Perhaps our Partners can help you arrange a virtual author visit or give you more information about that author or illustrator. If you send me your idea—like these or anything else that fits our mission—I will put you in contact with our Board liaison for that Partner, who can help you to move it forward.

Related to goal #2, a robust membership is essential to the overall health and vitality of an organization. As noted above, we need you and your participation to make us the kind of professional association that you want us to be and to continue to offer what no other group does—a singular emphasis on the importance of global children’s and young adult books for American readers. Many of you have served or are serving on committees for USBBY. We thank you for your involvement. Some of you are serving as our new State Ambassadors, who can assist us with outreach, publicity, and attracting new members in regions around the country. If you would like to be involved in either of these ways let me know through the USBBY website, and I will forward your interest to the appropriate persons.

However, one way that everyone can and needs to be involved is through membership recruitment. Think of your colleagues whose interests match our vision and mission. Let them know what we are and do, and encourage them to join USBBY. Use our website to show them our amazing projects! Coming soon will be a Power Point presentation about USBBY that will be posted to our website for you to use in any professional presentations, workshops, or college classes with which you may be involved. If you are a teacher or librarian educator, please publicize our student membership (at $15 per year—a bargain!). We need to grow, we need younger members for our future viability, and we need your help!

Finally, I remind you of three more specific benefits that USBBY will provide in fall 2011. In September, the fourth book in our Bridges series, Bridges to Understanding: Envisioning the World through Children’s Books, will be published (with Scarecrow Press). This volume, edited by Linda Pavonetti, will include annotations of international children’s books published from 2005 to 2009. All four of the titles in this series are important professional resources.

In October, the USBBY sponsored 9th IBBY Regional Conference will be held from the 21st to the 23rd in Fresno, California. You may still register (until October 1) for this sure-to-be memorable gathering of children’s literature professionals from around the U.S. and internationally. Speakers include authors and illustrators from Brazil, South Africa/Great Britain, Palestine, and Ghana/Canada, as well as others with international roots. Check our website for full details and registration information. You will be glad you attended and will return home enriched and energized.

In November, if you attend NCTE in Chicago, plan to include our co-sponsored session on Sunday, November 20 at 11:30. This meeting will feature the Outstanding Books for and about Young People with Disabilities, a project that is overseen by our parent organization IBBY. Several American authors, including Sharon Draper, whose work has been selected for this recognition, will appear on the program panel. Check our website for the latest details.

I hope to see you at one of these meetings, and I ask you to join us in actively promoting the importance of international literature for children.

USBBY News Blast

Last fall, USBBY members were asked to participate in a brief online survey about the newsletter. The response rate was excellent with 137 members responding. One of the purposes of the survey was to consider whether to move to a digital only newsletter. While the majority preferred to receive the newsletter in print format, the responses were close, 52% for print and 48% for digital. Several suggestions in the open ended responses, however, led to the idea of sending regular digital “news blasts” to members via email. In this way, reminders and current news including electronic links with more information can be shared. USBBY members should now be receiving these news blasts. Please feel free to share ideas about the types of updates and electronic information that you would like to receive.

New Name, New Look for USBBY Newsletter

As I begin my term as editor of this newsletter, I would like to express my appreciation to Janelle Mathis for her six years of service as editor of the newsletter. Each newsletter during that time has helped USBBY members stay informed about USBBY initiatives and to learn more about quality literature for children and young adults.

As we neared the transition to a new editorship, the board realized that the newsletter did not have a name. In the discussions that followed, several names were suggested that included the word, “bridges.” Since USBBY has both a Bridge to Understanding Award and an edited volume, Bridges to Understanding, focused on international literature, titling the newsletter Bridges seemed a good fit with our mission and projects.

This new name led to the design of a new masthead with images of bridges around the world thanks to Ann Speltz who has served as General Secretary at the Secretariat.

International Children's Book Day
Submitted by Doris Gebel

International Children's Book Day was celebrated in many creative ways as evidenced by the suggestions posted on the ICBD page on our USBBY.ORG website. From ways to introduce global poetry to games, there are ideas for the taking. Resources for finding international literature for children are listed along with a list of how many IBBY National Sections celebrate this day. Many libraries used these great program ideas as they planned for this year’s Summer Reading Club theme of "One World, Many Stories." This page will be updated throughout the year so that you may continue to add your suggestions. Our hope is that this page will become a rich resource of ideas for ways to promote international understanding through children's literature.

Pakistan-born Canadian author Rukhsana Khan shared her experiences as an author and storyteller at the recent USBBY-IRA co-sponsored session in Orlando, Florida. Among her many books, she spoke about The Roses in My Carpet, which focuses on the life of a young Afghani and his family in a refugee camp. The story grew out of the author’s sponsorship of a young child, Kareem, who was living in a refugee camp as a result of the Russian invasion of Afghanistan. In 1992, Khan went to Peshawar, Pakistan to meet Kareem and his family. During the visit, a worker from a relief organization urged her to write a piece to highlight what was happening in that area of the world. Finally, in 1998, The Roses in My Carpet was published, and Khan received the Januscz Korczak Award from the Polish section of IBBY for the picture book. Next, she turned to her book, Wanting Mor, which again centers on an Afghani child, this time a young girl, Jameela whose mother dies, and afterward, she is taken to Kabul by her father and then abandoned on a street corner. Currently, Khan is working on a sequel to Wanting Mor, and she is planning on “happier” times for Jameela. Wanting Mor was selected for the 2010 Outstanding International Book List.
The USBBY-ALA co-sponsored session at ALA in New Orleans offered attendees an opportunity to hear a panel discussion of four representatives from independent publishers, Patsy Aldana, publisher of Groundwood Books, Kira Lynn from Kane Miller Books, Ellen Myrick, marketing representative for Lemniscaat and North-South Books, and Victoria Rock, editor with Chronicle Books, discussing their insights and issues relating to international children's books. One of the important points made was that books from other countries often don’t “look” like North American books. However, that is the point—to provide other perspectives and to increase our global awareness. Panel participants shared displays of recent publications and marketing materials.

In addition, the books selected to the 2011 Outstanding International Books List were on display.
NCTE-USBBY Co-Sponsored Session in Chicago, Sunday, November 20, 2011
Session: M.02 - 11:30 am to 12:45 pm, Room: TBA

Outstanding Books For and About Young People with Disabilities

USBBY has as one of its objectives to promote books that depict disabled people with an emphasis on similarities rather than differences in order to give all readers the possibility of understanding.

For this co-sponsored session, a panel of award-winning authors will discuss their books and how they craft literature that speaks to young readers. Panel participants include Katherine Erskine, author of the 2010 National Book Award for Mockingbird, sponsored by Penguin Young Readers Group and Sharon Draper, author of Out of My Mind, sponsored by Simon & Schuster.
Building Global Partnerships
Ellis Vance

As reported in previous issues of the USBBY Newsletter, USBBY is currently engaged in twinning partnerships with five other IBBY national sections worldwide: South Africa, Lebanon, Palestine, Haiti, and Zambia.

Twinning can take many forms, but in keeping with USBBY’s mission, the intent is to promote international understanding of peace and goodwill between and among countries through books for children and young adults, by:

- Exploring and promoting materials of literary merit for young people;
- Cooperating with IBBY and other organizations with similar goals as USBBY;
- Facilitating the exchange of information about books of international interest for children/young people; and
- Promoting reading of such books by children and young people in the U.S.

Twinning is meant to benefit both partner countries. Since 2004, USBBY has:

- Paid the annual IBBY dues for our partners.
- Provided funding to purchase books or other needed resources for classrooms and libraries.
- Provided or funded trainings for writers, illustrators, teachers, and librarians.

During the planning of the 2004 IBBY World Congress in Cape Town, South Africa, USBBY supported the efforts of the South African IBBY national section by providing funding, Congress speakers, and participants. USBBY also made a 5-year commitment to assist South Africa with the payment of its annual IBBY dues.

Since 2007, the USBBY Board also committed to twinning with Lebanon, Palestine, Haiti, and Zambia. As a first effort, USBBY earmarked its Hands Across the Sea Funds to help support the payment of IBBY dues for Lebanon and Palestine in 2007 and for Haiti in 2008 and 2009. USBBY also supports the IBBY Children in Crisis Fund that is helping fund projects affecting children in war-torn areas of Lebanon and Palestine and in the disaster areas of Haiti, Pakistan, and Japan. We have also supported the Lubuto Library Project in Zambia. Some of our twinning partners have completed applications and received funding through USBBY’s Special Projects Fund.

During the 2011 presidency of Barbara Lehman, the USBBY Board has set aside time to discuss how we can strengthen our twinning partnerships and make them more mutual. We also wish to discuss how we can use these partnerships to enhance efforts to internationalize USBBY to an even greater extent.

At its recent Board meeting in New Orleans, the Board approved the following overall new strategies:

- Board members have been appointed as liaisons to each of our twinning partners. Letters of introduction about our new goals have been sent to our partners with a request that each partner link their websites to ours and to each other. Liaisons will also encourage the connection of e-pals between children in the U.S. and children in twinning partner’s countries.
- Board liaisons will explore with their contacts what their projects and/or special needs are and how we can benefit each other. This will be done through frequent emails and a scheduled joint meeting at the 2012 IBBY World Congress in London. Reciprocal website postings will include newsletters, information about projects, lists of children’s books published in twinning partner countries, and other relevant websites. The liaisons will coordinate video greetings to be shown at IRA, ALA, and NCTE co-sponsored sessions. They will also seek linkages between and among the twinning partners.
- Bridges, the USBBY newsletter publication, will continue to include news about the twinning partners in each issue in the “Global Partnerships” column. A copy of each edition of Bridges will be sent by PDF or hard copy to our partners, and copies of their newsletters will be posted on the USBBY website.
- USBBY will feature speakers, books, or topics at its annual IRA, ALA, and NCTE co-sponsored sessions related to its twinning partners. We will look for links to immigrant populations representing twinning partners that live close to these conference locations.
• USBBY committees, especially for the Astrid Lingren Memorial Award and the IBBY-Asahi Award, will actively support applications for these awards from among our twinning partners.

• IBBY Regional Conferences will feature speakers, books, or topics related to twinning partners. Video greetings from our partners will be encouraged and will be shared at the conference.

Twinning partner Board liaisons appointed for 2011 are:
Haiti: Barbara Lehman and Evelyn Freeman
Lebanon: Kathy Short and Beth Eller
Palestine: Suzanne Fisher Staples, Margaret Chang, and Nancy Hadaway
South Africa: Barbara Lehman, Ed Sullivan, and Doris Walker-Dalhouse
Zambia: Doris Gebel and Ellis Vance

USBBY encourages ideas and/or comments from our members regarding our twinning partners and this increased effort by the Board. These can be sent to:
Ellis Vance at Executive.Director@usbby.org.

Gift Cards Available for Donations to USBBY’s Special Projects

Fear and Safety in the Scholarly World of Children’s Literature
Janelle Mathis, University of North Texas, and Kathy G. Short, University of Arizona

On our long flight back from the 20th Biennial Congress of the International Research Society for Children’s Literature in Brisbane, Australia, July 4-8, 2011, we reflected on our experiences and the connections between this group of scholars and the work of USBBY members. The Congress sessions focused on critical analyses of children’s and young adult literature around the theme of fear and safety with most presenters coming from literary studies in English departments and colleges. A range of other interdisciplinary fields were also represented, including education and library science, along with authors and illustrators who analyzed their creative processes.

Although we felt some cultural tension because the scholarly traditions, terminology, and methodologies that literary critics use in approaching texts for children differed from ours as educators, we also gained new insights from these tensions. We enjoyed hearing about unfamiliar texts from other countries as well as new interpretations and perspectives on familiar texts. We were exposed to new theoretical frames and content analysis methodologies along with new applications of familiar theories. We came away with long lists of books to seek out and articles to read. In addition, we connected with a network of scholars who introduced us to other international conferences, scholarly groups, and journals on children’s literature.

The 2011 Congress focus on fear and safety in children’s literature wove throughout the sessions and keynotes. We began each day with keynote presenters from disciplines outside of children’s literature who informed and broadened our thinking. We were particularly struck by Gillian Whitlock from the University of Queensland, a researcher in a life narratives project on the letters, photographs, and artifacts of asylum seekers who were sent to mandatory detention... camps on islands off the coast of Australia during the Pacific Solution, 2002-2007. She is examining the images, narratives, and traces of children in these camps and their ongoing dehumanization as objects of fear in the Australian mass media. She authored Soft Weapons: Autobiography in Transit (Chicago, 2007), a book on how life narratives were a potent, yet flawed, means of cross-cultural engagement with human rights in the “war on terror” after 9-11, and is writing another book on human rights issues, Postcolonialism and Life Narratives. She argued that Shaun Tan in The Lost Thing takes on the dark feelings of disgust, paranoia, and indifference toward asylum seekers through the view of the spectator. She labeled his work as dealing with “percepticide,” a seeing that refuses to engage with suffering and that reflects the close relationship of compassion and aversion. She argued that literature is a way to engage with precarious life, asking, who counts as human? Whose life counts as a life? What makes for a grievable life?

Another keynote by David Buckingham, a researcher on children and media from London University, interrogated the discourses of risk that characterize discussions about children’s encounters with media. He argued that risk is a socio-cultural construct related to the concept of “dirt,” matter out of place that disrupts ordinariness and threatens stability. He believes that although there is not a greater risk for children today, the discourse on risk is much greater and is used as an excuse for governments to enact controls, enforce social norms, and impose adult surveillance. His most recent book is The Material Child: Growing up in Consumer Culture (Polity Press, 2011).

One session we particularly appreciated provided information on peer-reviewed international journals on children’s literature. International Research in Children’s Literature, the journal of IRSCL, focuses on literary scholarship in children’s literature across international settings. Papers: Explorations into Children’s Literature is a free, open access on-line journal that publishes scholarly writing on children’s fiction, with a focus that includes, but is not limited to, Australian literature. Jeunesse: Young People, Texts, Cultures, formerly the Canadian Children’s Literature Journal, publishes articles in English and French on the cultural functions and representations of “the child.” The journal has a special interest in Canada, but like Papers, welcomes submissions concerning all areas and cultures. Some sections of each issue are available with free open access, but the major articles require a subscription. Barnboken: Journal of Children’s Literature Research is a free, open access on-line journal from Sweden that publishes articles on research in children’s literature in Swedish and English. Interjuli publishes articles in German and English with a focus on literary research and children’s interactions with books. Both journals accept articles that focus more broadly on international literature. Three well-known journals to U.S. scholars are The Lion and the Unicorn, which publishes literary and cultural analyses of texts, Children’s Literature in Education, which publishes scholarly articles on all aspects of children’s literature worldwide, and Bookbird, which focuses on responses from children as well as discussions of texts across international contexts.

The International Research Society for Children’s Literature states that their purpose is to encourage research into children’s and young people’s literature and reading. They provide a forum for exchanging professional information and the discussion of theories of children’s literature as applied to texts of all kinds (www.irsl.com). The next IRSCL Congress will be August 17-21, 2013 in Maastricht, Netherlands on the theme of Children’s Literature and Media Cultures. The formal call for proposals and subthemes will be on the IRSCL web site. We encourage USBBY members to consider participating and to connect with this scholarly community.
What is the Bridge to Understanding Award?

This prestigious award was established in memory of Arlene Pillar, an educator who served USBBY as newsletter editor from 1984 until 1990.

The award recognizes a program that promotes reading as a way to expand understanding of one or more cultures or countries outside of the United States. Preference is given to programs that focus on contemporary life and culture.

Organizations eligible for this award include schools, libraries, scout troops, clubs, and bookstores. The program may be a one-time event or an ongoing series that serves children ranging in age from kindergarten through tenth grade.

This award carries a monetary prize of $1,000 and a certificate.
How Does that Translate
by Peg Ciszek

All the selections listed below are easy recommendations, but there are some titles not to be missed. Ruby Red by Kerstin Gier is a suspenseful, well translated tale written with humor and a little bit of romance. If its eye-catching packaging doesn't have readers checking it out, word of mouth will propel this title. It is the first in a trilogy and expect the second title in spring of 2012.

Soldier Bear by Bibi Dumon Tak was definitely a surprise. A based-on-fact tale of Polish soldiers who adopt a bear cub during WWII, this one will have readers wondering how this tale could possibly be true. The bear, a registered soldier, travels with the troops during the war. The bear is a distraction from the war for the soldiers, but also contributes to the war effort by carrying ammunition and finding spies. After more than five years in the military, the bear is retired to the Edinburgh Zoo in Scotland.

For the younger set, The Schuberts' The Umbrella is an entertaining adventure about a little black dog traveling around the world by umbrella. One will definitely want to view this wordless book more than once to find all the animals and events in each illustration. 999 Tadpoles by Ken Kimura is a charmingly fun, predictable tale for youngsters. And in the book, In the Meadow, the illustrator Komako Sakai flawlessly captures a preschooler's fascination with nature.

Books for Young Children

Mouse is pleased to find an apple, but decides to keep it a secret by burying it. One by one, animals quiz Mouse as to what is being hidden. Each time Mouse answers "It's my secret, and I'll never tell." While the questioning is going on, we watch an apple tree growing behind Mouse. Eventually the full grown tree drops all of its apples, and Mouse's secret is out. As all the animals enjoy the apples, Mouse realizes that some secrets are more fun when shared.

A young girl relaxing by the river with her family is distracted by a butterfly. Following the butterfly, she wanders into the meadow. When the winged insect flutters away, the young girl becomes aware of the smells, sounds, plants, and insects in the tall grass surrounding her. When she realizes that she doesn't know where she is, she sees that Mother is near. The two walk hand in hand back to the beach. Komako Sakai has captured a young child's sense of discovery and fascination in nature with her lovely acrylic and oil illustrations. This title is the first in the Being in the World series.

Mother and Father Frog are proud of their 999 tadpoles swimming in the pond. When the tadpoles become frogs, the size of their family dictates that it is time to look for a larger home. With Father Frog leading the way, the family begins their trek across the field. When Father is swooped up by a hawk, Mother grabs onto Father and each frog youngster grabs on to another creating a long dangling line of frogs being carried by the hawk. The hawk is delighted with his large catch, but eventually is no longer able to hang on to all the frogs. Luckily for the amphibians, when they fall from the sky, they "splash" into a new larger aquatic home.

Anton is wearing what he believes to be a magic hat. It is an oversized hat, so when he uses his hands to cast his disappearing spell, the hat always slips over his eyes. When he lifts the hat off of his eyes, he is pleased to see that sometimes the disappearing spell works. What Anton does not see when his eyes are covered is that his subjects, a bird or his friend, have simply flown away or walked off. Believing that he may have turned his friend Luke into a bird, Anton captures the bird under his hat. When his friends, including Luke, ask Anton if he has seen their bird, he razzle-dazzles them by making the bird appear under his hat. A true magician!

Because she is round, Clementine the snail has an interest in everything round - balloons, steering wheels, tires. The moon especially intrigues her. Clementine decides to travel to there. Trying a trampoline and then a slingshot as her transportation, she meets with no success. Her friend Paul the worm suggests a rocket and helps to send her aloft. Though she never reaches her final destination, while in the sky she realizes that her home planet is round. Upon returning to earth, she is now content with the knowledge that she lives on a circular home.

On a blustery day, a little black dog finds a discarded umbrella next to a tree. Holding fast to the umbrella, the dog is swept up into the air by the strong winds. Lifted high into the sky, the pup is light enough to walk on the clouds. Parachuting down with his umbrella, he adventures to a jungle, a desert, and a polar region where he encounters environments and animals that are strange to him. The umbrella comes in handy as a weapon when alligators surround the dog. Creatively using the umbrella as a boat, dog travels the ocean. High in the air once again, he recognizes his home below and lands safely, proud of the adventures he has taken. The illustration on the endpapers suggests that a cat who is staring at the umbrella may soon find adventures of her own. The readers' imagination will fill in the text in this attractive, wordless book.
Books for Older Children

Told in cartoon panels, seven bears are building a house in preparation for the winter. Pig, from a very familiar fairytale, repeatedly tells the bears to build their house with bricks. When the bears tire of only drinking milk from their cow, one of the bears sets off to sell her. The bear is met by an old man who does an exchange for a "magic bean." Once the reader realizes where the story is going, it is a matter of wondering who will show up next. This clever, humorous tale will most be enjoyed by those familiar with fairytale. There are two additional titles in this series, but this one stands alone.

In the third book in The Children of Crow Cove series, Tink blames himself for the "family's" lack of food. Feeling that he has brought them bad luck, he secretly decides to leave. On his journey he finds a half-dead man and returns to his friends to get assistance. Some of the people in his community recognize the man who had been a part of their lives before they came to Crow Cove. Some of their memories are of his physical abuse. Though the man can be abusive, he also teaches Tink to fish which provides the community with a new source of food. It would be best to read the first two books in the series first: Crow-Girl and Eidi.

It started with dizzy spells, then things began to blur. When everything came into focus Gwyneth found that she had traveled to the past. Gwyneth has inherited her family's time travel gene. For a long time, it was believed that Gwyneth's cousin would inherit the special gene, and she was the one trained for life in the past. When family discovers that it is Gwyneth, her time traveling becomes monitored by a group called the Guardians. The Guardians can send Gwyneth to a specific time in the past using a chronograph. Accompanying her on her travels is a handsome young man trained since an early age on etiquette and customs of the past. As the two travelers are sent to specific times with specific tasks, they stumble on more questions than answers in their travels, and by the end of this first book in this trilogy, both travelers are questioning their mission and training. This title has adventure, humor, a little bit of romance, and ghosts. Sapphire Blue, the second book in the series, is due out in spring of 2012.

Traveling to the bay of caverns in search of mussels and crabs for a meal, Amos is surprised to hear a woman's voice. A mermaid, whose kingdom is at war, chooses Amos to become a Mask Wearer. She sends him on a journey to the woods of Tarkasis, in search of a mask. Amos does not understand the purpose of the journey, but sets off encountering fairies, druids, shapeshifters, gorgons, stone people, and a powerful sorcerer along the way. Eventually Amos realizes that the mask he is seeking is endowed with great power, and he is to be the first in a new generation of heroes whose task is to restore balance between good and evil in the world. This is the first in a series.

During WWII when Germany invades Poland, two young Poles, Peter and Stanislav, flee to the border and escape into Iran. The two friends decide to join the British army to fight the Nazis. On their first assignment to deliver equipment to British troops, they meet a young boy with a half starved bear cub in a sack. Trading food for the bear cub, Peter nourishes the animal to health. This begins the five year companionship between the soldiers and the bear. The bear travels with the troops and provides a distraction from the horrors of war that the soldiers desperately need. Though there are occasional complaints from officers, the bear has a unique role in ferreting out spies and assisting in interrogations. This unusual tale based on a true story ends with Peter having to decide the bear’s fate at the end of the war. Photographs of the real bear are included, and simple maps help young readers understand the war.

What are the best books to grow cultural and global awareness and sustain the critical ability of considering various points of view? How can we use books with multicultural and international themes to assist our students in coming to deep understandings of peace and social justice?
